Presentation Overview

- Alaska Research Base
- 2010 Alaska Victimization Survey
- Governor’s Initiative to End the Epidemic of Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault
Importance of strong researcher-practitioner partnerships, working together to address common goals:

- Uniform Crime Reports
- Juvenile Justice Studies
- Alaska State Trooper Studies
- Anchorage Police Department Studies
- Alaska Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner Studies
- Alaska Department of Law Studies

Researchers meet with practitioners in Nome to discuss policy and practice.
• Funded by the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault.
• Designed to establish a baseline with statewide intimate partner and sexual violence estimates.
• Modeled after the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Surveillance System (CDC, NIJ, DoD) and administered by RTI.
• Utilized a statewide random digit dial dual frame phone survey (both land and cell phone lines).
• Maximized respondent safety and confidentiality.
Survey respondents were limited to English-speaking adult women residing in a household with at least one land or cell phone line.

Includes 871 adult women throughout Alaska, surveyed in May/June 2010.

Sample provides an excellent representation of the Alaska population of adult women.

Sampling weights were used to control for selection, non-response, and coverage.
Important Limitations

• Only provides a statewide average and masks regional differences.

• Excluded non-English speaking women, women without phone access, and women not living in a residence.

• Measured number of victims, not number of victimizations.

• Estimates may also be conservative because of the continuing stigma of reporting intimate partner and sexual violence.
• Measured lifetime and past year intimate partner violence:
  • Physical violence
  • Threats of physical violence
  • Includes intimate partners only, defined as romantic or sexual partners

• Measured lifetime and past year sexual violence:
  • Alcohol/drug involved sexual assault (when alcohol or drug intoxicated and unable to consent)
  • Forcible sexual assault

We sincerely thank the women who invested time and effort to participate in the 2010 Alaska Victimization Survey.

They re-lived horrendous experiences – experiences no one should be subjected to – to help the rest of us understand the extent of intimate partner and sexual violence in Alaska. Thank you!
Survey reveals ugly domestic violence stats

ALASKA: 59 percent of women in poll experienced violence, threats.

By LISA DEMER
ldemer@adn.com

The first survey of Alaska women about sexual assault and domestic violence found that more than half had been victimized at some point in their life and about one in eight had been victimized in the year before the survey.

The University of Alaska Anchorage Justice Center surveyed 871 Alaska adult women by telephone in May and June under a $280,000 state grant. Women were picked randomly. Researchers called cell phone and land line numbers from across the state.

INSIDE

THE NUMBERS: Chart shows rates of sexual abuse or violence against women in a lifetime and in the past year.

For years, Alaska has struggled with high rates of sexual assault and domestic violence, but those findings are most often based on crimes reported to law enforcement. The new survey found much higher rates:

- Overall, almost 50 percent of the women surveyed said they had experienced physical violence or threats of it from a partner or sexual violence from anyone, at some point in their lives, the survey found. If that percentage holds true for the population as a whole, that means an estimated 145,000 Alaska women have been victimized, said Andre Rossy, Justice Center director and the lead researcher.
- Nearly 27 percent of the women said that over their lifetime they had had unwanted sex when they were drunk, high or passed out, and unable to consent. Almost as many had been sexually assaulted after being subjected to physical force or threats, the survey found.
- During the year previous to the survey, close to 12 percent of the women said that they had experienced sexual violence or domestic violence or threats of it. About 9 percent said they had suffered physical violence at the hands of a romantic or sexual partner including being slapped, kicked, pushed, beaten, burned or choked.
- Also in the past year, 2.5 percent said they had been sexually assaulted, which doesn't count those too disoriented to give consent because of drinking or drugs. That means an estimated 6,181 Alaska women had been victims of sexual assaults in one year.

WHAT IS FWWI?
An AK Native led initiative that provides intensive education and training to reduce the cycle of domestic violence, child sexual abuse and child neglect in the State of Alaska.

ELDERS LEADING THE WAY...
By sharing their stories, breaking the silence of abuse and making it culturally appropriate for others to talk about past harm.

TARGET AUDIENCE?
FWWI targets all individuals 21+ who desire change at the individual, family, and/or community level. A 3-Year Model is available for the regions of Alaska to adapt and implement within their communities.

Using Data to Impact Policy

- Findings from UAA research partnerships aided in defining key aspects of Governor Sean Parnell’s initiative

Example: “Sexual assault cases with adult victims that were originally reported to police paraprofessionals (e.g. VPSOs) were 3.5 times more likely to be prosecuted than sexual assault cases originally reported directly to the troopers.”
• Establish a law enforcement presence in every community that desires one to improve public safety:

- 15 new Village Public Safety Officers (VPSOs) every year for 10 years
- 80 positions are now filled
- Alaska Housing Finance Corporation funding
- VPSO oversight trooper positions
DV/SA Initiative
Public Safety Highlights

- Follow-up domestic violence troopers
- Expanding cyber crimes unit
- Sex offender sweeps
  - Partnership with US Marshals Service Sex Offender Investigation Branch (Project Last Frontier)
- Trooper post in Northwest Alaska (2 positions)
- VPSO distance learning domestic violence investigation pilot project
- Training position to increase DV/SA training for law enforcement
- Construction of new crime lab
- Increase funding for forensic sexual assault exams
- Five positions created through JAG/ARRA funding
- Forensic interviewing, Alaska Police Standards Council

Feds fighting sex abuse cycle in rural Alaska

Craig Medred | Dec 06, 2010

Hooper Bay, a village in far Western Alaska, is home to about 1,100 people, half of whom are under the age of 18. The village, located in the Yukon-Kuskokwim rivers delta, is home to 25 sex offenders, according to Alaska State Troopers.

The sex offender ratio there -- 1 for every 44 people -- is about seven times greater than in Anchorage, the state's largest city. But with so many minors in Hooper Bay, the official ratio underestimates the scope of the problem. The number of sex offenders in the adult population comes to a ratio of something more like 1 in 22.

Villages struggle with sex abuse cycle
Trooper-marshall sweep might expand to other regions of Alaska

Alaska State Troopers and the U.S. Marshals Service in Alaska are looking to expand a public safety initiative that made dozens of arrests in the Bethel region -- including 10 for alcohol-related crimes -- to other areas of the state.

The effort -- dubbed the Village Crime Reduction and Community-Oriented Policing program -- significantly boosted law enforcement numbers in the Southwest Alaska area for six days through Sunday.

The effort included troopers sent in from other posts in Alaska, as well as U.S. marshals sent from other areas of the state and even the Lower 48.
